how their generational knowledge can be applied today.

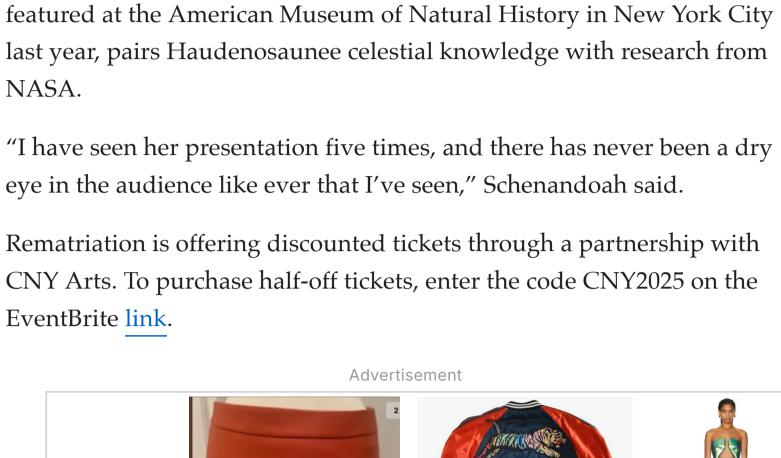

During the pandemic, the organization shifted its focus to community engagement. Over the past few years, they've hosted annual gatherings with around 200 Indigenous people each on Haudenosaunee lands in Central New York. At a gathering of Indigenous and non-Indigenous women in 2023, Rematriation decided that they wanted to share their knowledge on a Rematriation is a movement started by Indigenous women. It keeps life givers such as mothers and the Earth at the center and honors the role of men in that process, Schenandoah said.

Over 35 speakers will present film screenings, learning sessions and discussions surrounding the idea of matrilineality and rematriation.
